Call for Papers and Exhibitors

The 2nd European Conference on Microfluidics (μFlu'10) will be held in December 8-10, 2010, in Toulouse, France, at the "Centre de Conférences - METEO FRANCE", close to the city centre.

The contribution of Companies involved in the multi-disciplinary field of microfluidics is strongly encouraged under two forms:

- 1) Submission of applied papers especially addressed to draw strong scientific needs;
- 2) Exhibition of Microfluidics products and applications.

This European Conference is aimed at collecting various European experiences in the field of Applied Microfluidics. Research in Microfluidics in Europe is made in a large number of academic laboratories and small companies, the size of which limits investments that might give their technology a step change instead of an incremental one. For this reason, one main aim of the conference is to strengthen the links inside the European scientific community in this young discipline and to promote exchanges between European universities and European industrial companies in order to promote new well-structured, pan-European networks investigating every important aspect of Microfluidics.

In this context, European companies, institutes and universities are encouraged to participate and present their products.

Large time slots will be devoted to visits of the stands. Coffee breaks and poster sessions will be organised in the same room. Take this unique opportunity to showcase your company's resources and current developments to a large audience of academic and industrial experts !

Early-bird exhibitor rates are available until October 1st, 2010.

We look forward to seeing you in Toulouse !
